Helping every child to read and write well

Who should attend?

- Senior leaders
- English/phonics leaders
- Class teachers

Overview

Many systematic synthetic phonics programmes provide you with some of the tools for success - progressive content, consistent lesson routines and engaging decodable reading books - but today's classrooms are complex. How can you ensure that every child meets their potential when you have decreased support from additional adults, and children's needs vary wildly in all directions?

This exciting training day unpicks the thing that Rocket Phonics does differently - empowering teachers to take ownership. Teachers, leaders and phonics enthusiasts will be provided with a wealth of Rocket Phonics focused CPD which will explore:

- How best to utilise additional adult support if available, and how to manage without other adults
- How progress can look horizontal, vertical or be in both directions simultaneously
- How to help with children who are much further behind, and much further ahead of expectations

By attending this training you will:

- Understand the importance of taking ownership of your phonics teaching
- Learn practical approaches to making phonics work well for all children
- Have fun networking with colleagues from across the region

Meet your trainer: Abigail Steel

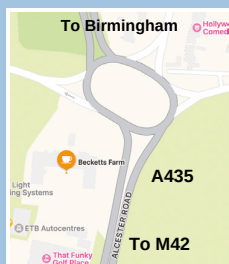

As one of the country's leading English language and literacy experts, Abigail Steel has supported schools, academy trusts, authorities and teachers, nationally and internationally. She has written literacy programmes, teaching resources, standardised assessments, children's books, reading schemes and published articles. Abi is a committee member for NAAE, the RRF and the International Foundation for Effective Reading Instruction.

"Abi's training was extraordinary! She has already got me thinking about the starting points and how we narrow this epic gap between where we need the children to be and where they currently are."
